What are positive affirmations?

This definition is still a little ambiguous so to elaborate, basically positive affirmations, what most people mean by them are positive phrases which you repeat to yourself which describe how you want to be.

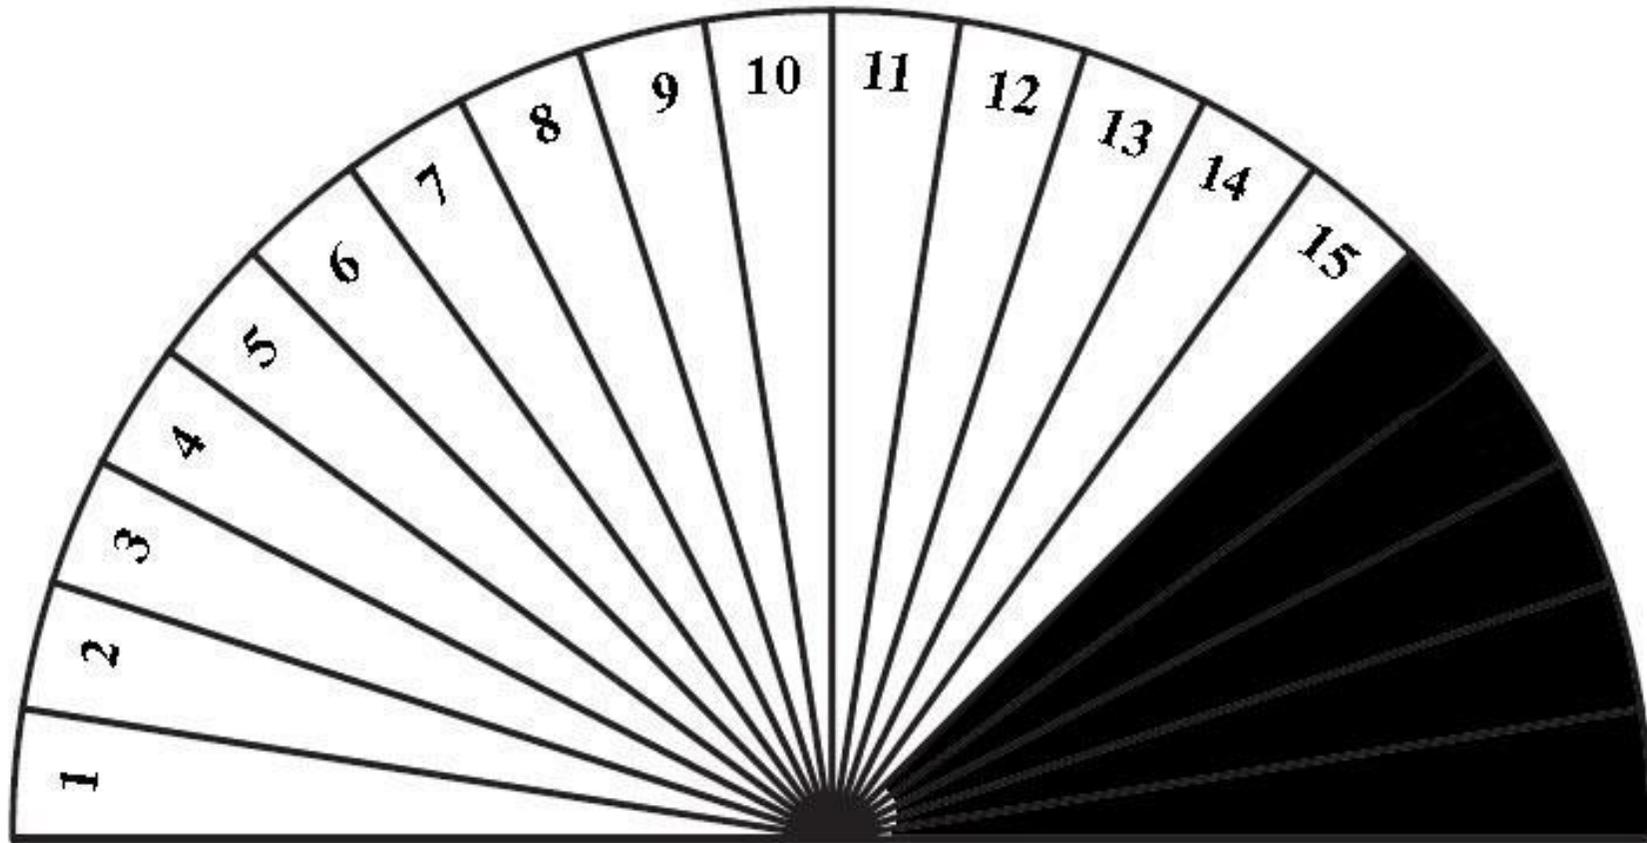

The theory (we believe it is much more than just a theory!) is that when you first start saying your positive affirmations, they may not be true, but with repetition they sink into your subconscious mind, you really start to believe them, and eventually they become your reality, they become a self-fulfilling prophecy and actually become true.

Over time they overwrite any limiting or negative beliefs you may have about yourself or about not being able to do something, and replace them with positive thoughts and beliefs which instil confidence, belief, positivity, ambition and much more.

Someone who is perhaps a little shy or un-confident would repeat these affirmations. They would want to change themselves from being shy and introverted to becoming self-confident and more outgoing perhaps, and so they would use positive affirmations and repeat them over and over.. and eventually they would start to sink in – the repetitive, positive self-talk would start to become a self-fulfilling prophecy.. Well in just the same way (but reversed) you can use the power of positive repetition for yourself!

Using positive affirmations gives you back control of your mind and the information it receives. It puts you in the driver's seat of your mind and lets you flood it with positive information which will change you for the better!

Self-Affirmation – How it Works

Now you have found through the science of radiesthesia the self-affirmation sentence that you need mostly to develop just now. Self-affirmations are positive statements or self-scripts that can condition the subconscious mind to help you develop a more positive perception of yourself. Affirmations can help you to change harmful behaviours or accomplish goals, and they can also help undo the damage caused by negative scripts, those things which we repeatedly tell ourselves (or which others repeatedly tell us) that contribute to a negative self-perception. Affirmations are easy to create and use as proposed in this EBook, but you'll need dedication and determination to make them work.

Most people want to dive straight in, and that is actually totally fine, affirmations are not rocket science, and this simple guide will just show you a couple of methods you can use, and we promise you, this will only take 3 minutes to read, so you can be using them straight away and making changes in your mind and in your life TODAY, from this very moment!

Eventually you will find your own style, way to say them, timing etc., but here is a really simple way to start.

Stand tall, relax your shoulders and stand with good posture – take a confident standing position.

Have your affirmations in front of you, written down or printed out – especially if it all is a new to you.

Say the suggested sentence drawn from your pendulum exercise, in a slow, confident tone of voice the way you mean it, like you believe it, and as if it is actually real or already happened.

Speaking slowly and confidently is important. Confident speakers take their time, they don't rush their words, they pronounce each one properly and speak with meaning.

Optionally you can stand at a mirror and look at yourself as you talk. You might find you feel awkward, but with practice this will be normal to you. Standing at a mirror shows you your posture and your confidence so you can ensure you are doing them properly – adjust your voice tone and posture as needed to always stand positively, and look yourself in the eye.

Getting a little deeper, it is good to add a little structure, and consistency.

Consistency is actually key, you need to repeat them day in, day out, so having a real structure, a daily routine will really help. Here is a standard routine for you to try, you can adapt it as needed, but it is a great place to start.

Say your affirmations twice a day.

Start in the morning, as soon as you can after waking up. This ensures you have a positive start to the day – that the first thing you start thinking about are your goals and ambitious, and of course, that you are thinking positive thoughts!

Say it the second time as close as you can before going to bed. This ensures that you have positive thoughts in your mind as you go to sleep, you are thinking about your goals and these will seep into your subconscious mind and solidify as you sleep.

Say it (or them) multiple times. It is up to you, but we recommend either five minute sessions (so just 10 minutes a day total), or alternatively, saying your chosen affirmations (one or more) ten times each, in a slow, confident voice – whatever suits you really, don't take too long, 10-15 minutes is probably too much and you might seem like a chore after some time, 5 minutes really is enough for permanent, lasting change.

Again, that's it, a little structure is good, try to stick to it – if you really do stick to this affirmation as proposed through your dowsing search for two weeks then you will see a real difference in yourself! Then it won't be like a structure you are trying to stick to at all... it will be something you want to do because you will have seen the powerful changes that positive affirmations can produce.

An extra step you can take is to write your affirmation(s) down, or just print it (them) out right from the EBook.

You can pin it (them) up around your house in key places that you will see them each day. On the fridge, in your school/work/gym locker, on the inside of your bathroom mirror, on the dashboard of your car.

This just adds a little extra, you will simply see your affirmation(s) randomly each day in the middle of the day, this will just jog your memory and remind you to stay positive and focused on your goals.

When you are constantly reminded about your affirmations and goals like this, you can accelerate your results as it's not just when you are saying your affirmations that you think about them and your goals, but constantly throughout the day you encounter little reminders and as a result you are always focused and develop a complete consciousness around achieving success and realizing your goals!

Some extra tips

Start with a focus. Don't pick too many subjects at once, keep yourself to the one proposed by the pendulum, as this is what you need most. It's the information right from your brain.

Be consistent. Repeat them daily and often.

Make a commitment to do them, maybe, for 30 days, no matter what. Think long term, and don't give up.

Monitor your mood first. Before you start your daily session, just take 30 seconds to "look inside" yourself, see how you feel, see how your emotions are, do you already feel positive, negative, a little tired.. just take note. Then, say your affirmations, slowly, take your time, and then do a "mood check" again. See how you feel, see how positive you now feel, see how you feel differently about yourself. This can be a great way to gain confidence in your affirmations early on. Before you even see the life changing results you really want, this simple experiment should show you how they can instantly lift your mood and change how you are feeling in an instant and inspire you to keep going so that you really do get to see the bigger and lasting changes you really want!

That's it.. lots of people go looking for that magic formula to self-improvement, looking for that powerful, complicated hidden technique... it really doesn't need to be like that – positive affirmations are for real, they can have a really powerful cumulative effect, and they can make real, lasting, dramatic changes to your life – to how you think, to how you act, to how you live your life!

Conclusion

That little voice in our brains can be incredibly critical. It's a constant reminder that we aren't good enough, ranging from slightly inept to a hopeless loser. It somehow finds a way to apply to any situation or circumstance so that we never quite measure up. Even when there is no denying that we actually succeeded at something, our inner voice will find a way to discount it so that all credit goes to someone or something else, or to just dumb luck.

Even worse, we believe all those negative thoughts. They aren't true. In fact, they aren't our own original thoughts. For the most part they are things that others have said to us, often in childhood. Constant criticism from parents, teachers, and others can do damage that stays with us for years. By the time we reach adulthood we have accepted those critical remarks as absolute truth. That "truth" is so ingrained in us that it has become a belief system.

You cannot possibly ask the pendulum whether God exists or does not, as the answer will always be the way you believe in religion or not. The kind of question is too abstract for words, and cannot be answered. You either believe in God or not. And if you believe in God, just proof it, avoiding representational answers.

Stephen Hawking¹ says he's an atheist, arguing that science offers a "more convincing explanation" for the origins of the universe and that the miracles of religion "aren't compatible" with scientific fact. "Before we understood science,

¹ Stephen William Hawking, CH, CBE, FRS, FRSA, born 8 January 1942) is an English theoretical physicist, cosmologist, author and Director of Research at the Centre for Theoretical Cosmology within the University of Cambridge His scientific works include a collaboration with Roger Penrose on gravitational singularity theorems in the framework of general relativity, and the theoretical prediction that black holes emit radiation, often called Hawking radiation. Hawking was the first to set forth a theory of cosmology explained by a union of the general theory of relativity and quantum mechanics. He is a vigorous supporter of the many-worlds interpretation of quantum mechanics. He is an Honorary Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts, a lifetime member of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, and a recipient of the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest civilian award in the United States. Hawking was the Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at the University of Cambridge between 1979 and 2009 and has achieved commercial success with works of popular science in which he discusses his own theories and cosmology in general; his book A Brief History of Time appeared on the British Sunday Times best-seller list for a record-breaking 237 weeks. Hawking has a rare early-onset, slow-progressing form of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), commonly known as motor neurone disease in the UK and as Lou it was natural to believe that God created the universe, but now science offers a more convincing explanation,” the celebrated physicist said in a video posted by Spanish newspaper El Mundo. “What I meant by ‘we would know the mind of God’ is we would know everything that God would know if there was a God, but there isn’t. I’m an atheist.”

Hawking’s remarks came in response to a question from El Mundo journalist Pablo Jauregui, who quizzed Hawking about his religious leanings in the lead-up to this week’s Starmus Festival in the Canary Islands. The “mind of God” reference was Hawking’s effort to clarify a passage in his 1988 book “A Brief History of Time,” in which he wrote that scientists would “know the mind of God” if a unifying set of scientific principles known colloquially as the theory of everything were discovered.

In 2011, he told The Guardian that he didn’t believe in a heaven or an afterlife, calling it “a fairy story for people afraid of the dark.” In 2007, he told the BBC that he was “not religious in the normal sense,” adding, “I believe the universe is governed by the laws of science. The laws may have been decreed by God, but God does not intervene to break the laws.”

The science-religion debate has been going on since science was born, centuries ago. Until relatively recently, it seemed to have quietened down, but now Hawking and others have brought it back into the limelight. It's striking that the scientists who contribute most vociferously to the arguments work in the field of evolutionary biology and fundamental physics. These, at least superficially, appear to be the territories where science and religion can make conflicting claims, leading us to ask which has the better case. But are they alternatives? Is there really any serious argument between the two?

Science and religion are about fundamentally different things. No religion has ever been rendered obsolete by facts or observations, but this happens to most scientific theories, at least in the long run. Science advances over the wreckage of its theories by continually putting theoretical ideas to experimental test; no matter how beautiful a theoretical idea might be, it must be discarded if it is at odds with experiment. Like any other human activity, science has flaws and does not always flow smoothly, but no one can seriously doubt the progress it has made in helping us understand the world and in helping to underpin technology.

Gehrig's Disease in the US, that has gradually paralysed him over the decades. He now communicates using a single cheek muscle attached to a speech-generating device.

As such, positive affirmations are a way of changing that false belief system. Some will argue that this won't work because you can't just shut down those negative thoughts, but they misunderstand. The point is not to get into a mental screaming match with yourself, nor is it to deny they exist – quite the contrary!

The purpose of positive affirmations is to raise your awareness, and to question and challenge the negative. It's about learning to stop letting your head run on autopilot and accepting every bad thought as some kind of gospel. It's about listening to yourself and realizing that, oh my gosh, that garbage isn't even true!

Positive affirmations help you stop being so judgmental of yourself, and they can also help pull you out of the gutter of gloom. It's easy to get stuck focusing on problems, and when that happens we remain blinded to solutions. We have made the final decision that there is no solution. Period. With such a closed mind, the solution could show up on our doorstep and we wouldn't even see it.

If we choose to focus on the positive instead, we are at least leaving a window open. We're allowing ourselves to believe that maybe we don't have all the answers yet, and maybe possibilities do exist. We are letting down our walls of resistance, and when that solution does show up we'll recognize it at once. We won't even be surprised because, after all, we knew it was coming.
